Origin Spotlight - Guatemala Adipsa Region

Guatemala Adipsa is in the mountain region Sierra de las Minas, a national reserve between 750m and 7500m above sea level. The Sierra de las Minas has a very special micro climate which is unique because the mountain range is spread east to west. Organic agriculture is used in this area which helps environmental and social sustainability for the region. Adipsa began in 1996 as a reforestation project with coffee and shade trees. Adipsa focuses on a few main goals, including the environment, production, and education. They focus on environment to protect wild life and nature in the area. The producers work to improve the soil and protect their water sources. There is a focus on production, through promotion of diversification of cash crops so members have a steadier and less risky income throughout the year. Education is a main focus; there are scholarships available for the kids of members for primary school and junior high. 300 children have already benefited from these scholarships. Also micro credit helps members with small loans to start the harvest or invest in buying seeds.
